The psychologists at Child and Family Counseling Group, PLC administer and interpret neuropsychological tests. A complete neuropsychological evaluation includes motor, sensory, intellectual, attention and concentration, learning, memory and personality and emotional testing. Neuropsychological evaluations are conducted employing interviews, test batteries, and treatment/rehabilitation planning. Spouses, families, or significant others are frequently involved both in the evaluation and the treatment processes.

Frequently, a physician or other professional will refer a patient for a neuropsychological evaluation after a period of time when body functions have begun to change, after a person has gone through a medical or physical trauma of some sort or because of a difficult to diagnose learning, emotional or behavior problem.
