Wartime veterans and their surviving spouses can potentially benefit from a VA's Non-Service Connected Pension, sometimes informally referred to as "Aid and Attendance," when their regularly recurring medical expenses are high and their monthly incomes are low. This income tax-free benefit provides monthly cash payments to help cover the costs of unreimbursed medical expenses for claimants with few financial resources to draw on for their support. Often, potential claimants can become eligible for this benefit upon entering an assisted living community or hiring an in-home caretaker.
